

Assistant Professor
Department of Microbiology and Immunology
University of Oklahoma Health Sciences Center

The Department of Microbiology and Immunology in the College of Medicine at the University of Oklahoma Health Sciences Center invites applications for a faculty teaching position at the Assistant Professor level. The primary responsibilities of the position include teaching in various team-taught medical, dental, and graduate courses, as well as serving as the Departmental Graduate Student Liaison, overseeing of the departmental graduate education program, and directing and coordinating the integration of microbiology and immunology content into the curriculum in the College of Medicine for preclinical medical students.

Requirements include a Ph.D. and/or M.D./D.O./D.V.M. and experience in teaching at the professional level including medical, dental and/or graduate programs. The individual will be expected to engage in curriculum development, promote innovative teaching methods, and demonstrate evidence of scholarly activity. Postdoctoral experience is preferred but not required.

The successful applicant will receive a highly competitive salary. Additional information about the Department and OUHSC can be found at <https://basicsciences.ouhsc.edu/mi/> or www.ouhsc.edu.

Interested candidates should submit a single PDF document containing their curriculum vitae, teaching philosophy, diversity statement and the names and contact information of three references to micro-office@ouhsc.edu. Please include: 'Faculty Position 2021' in the subject header. Review of applications will begin on April 1, 2021.
